any emphasis on, of this aspect of our needs with Russian capabilities - This is a reverse of the "missile gap" argument. If the Russians could produce nine missiles when we knew (regardless of whether they had them or we needed them) we had to pro- duce more. If we, under Kennedy, in- vested on conventional arms & forces, would not the Russians be ~~tempted~~ tempted to do like wise & feel just as in so doing? Where does this sort of thing stop. Find it is worth noting that those things Sch. suggested out to the needs the Kennedy administration wanted it needed - like more helicopters planes, were not what they ultimately needed for anti-guerrilla war, as some one else should then have told them. Again how did this influence USSR's use policies?
